V. Information We Collect and How We Collect It

At the time a business becomes a customer, 8x8 may already have collected information about that business when it was a prospective customer.

We gather information from prospective customers through a variety of ways, online and through offline communications, which include in-person meetings, web forms, emails, and phone calls. We collect contact information from representatives of our prospective business customers, such as name, company name, address, email address, and telephone number. As we communicate with these representatives, we may gather additional information from them, such as the potential customer's industry or revenues. We may also use data-appending methods to gather additional information, such as by reviewing biographical information posted by these representatives on the Internet. We also gather information about representatives' communications preferences.

In addition, we gather information based on prospective customers' systems and behavior in viewing our website pages and files on our website, including what pages or files are viewed, when users view them, the time spent on each page, browser and operating system, Internet Protocol address, the domain associated with that address, and location. We also collect information based on prospective customers' behavior in opening and viewing emails, such as whether a user opens an email and how long it is viewed. We collect information about prospective customers' behavior on our website and in viewing of emails by logging it and the use of beacons.

Finally, 8x8 gathers information from users of its website. 8x8 uses cookies to gather information from visitors. We use this information to analyze how visitors use our website and to better match their experience with our website with their interests. 8x8 also gathers information concerning the search terms that website visitors have used to reach our website.

After a prospective customer becomes a customer, we continue to maintain the information collected during the time in which it was a prospective customer. We also collect additional information from prospective customers that become customers using the means we describe above.

For instance, once prospective customers enter into a service agreement with 8x8, we collect and maintain information about customers' agreement with 8x8, payment information, and information about individual transactions. Also, we collect information needed to deliver online services, support, and training to customers. For example, we gather information to register customers to use our services, such as a user name and password for each individual account.

Calls with 8x8's Sales, Customer Service and other 8x8 employee groups may be recorded to gather information to improve customer service. However, 8x8's policy is that no call or conversation will be recorded unless all those involved in the call have been made aware in advance that the call is going to be recorded. Customers have the options of stating their consent to be recorded, implying consent by staying on the call, or opting out by asking that their call not be recorded or just hanging up.

Moreover, we collect information that you or others provide to us in connection with your use of our services. Examples include phone numbers you dial or provide to our services, service set-up information, service configurations and settings, recorded calls, messages, and meetings, voicemails, incoming and outgoing faxes, user-saved or stored content shared among users, email and text communications, and call center customer information you provide to us. Our systems also generate reports and information stored on your account. We maintain this system-generated information in connection with your account.

Where required by the Safe Harbor framework, 8x8 will not undertake any cross-border transfer of information to a third party unless the third party has certified its commitment to adhere to the Safe Harbor framework or 8x8 enters into a written agreement with such third party requiring that the third party provide at least the same level of privacy protection as is required by the relevant Safe Harbor principles. For instance, these third parties have agreed to keep the stored information confidential and to not use or disclose that information without our authorization.

We reserve the right to share or transfer your information in connection with a future or actual sale, merger, reorganization, or other transfer of our business (including under bankruptcy proceedings). We also may share or disclose your information if we receive a request or demand for such information in the form of:

Finally, we reserve the right to share any information that is not personally identifiable information, such as aggregated information without personally identifiable elements and any de-identified or anonymized information. For instance, as a publicly traded company, 8x8 is required to file numerous reports with different administrative bodies. When we do so, 8x8 may provide aggregate statistics about customers, sales, and traffic patterns. None of these reports or statistics will include personally identifiable information.

Except as set forth above, it is 8x8's policy not to share with third parties any information that we collect under this policy without your permission. 8x8's business does not include selling or renting any lists of customers, prospective customers, or their representatives.
